Index

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1880,
By BOERICKE & TAFEL,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Index to the Encyclopedia of Pure Materia Medica embraces everything except Houat's "provings" of Anantherum, Bufo, Cubeba, Curare, Kali iodatum, Piper nig., and Sarracenia, and Wolf's "proving" of Thuja. These have been omitted, since it has been demonstrated that they are untrustworthy as pathogenesies.

We are of the opinion that a few other so-called provings are unreliable, but as it cannot now be demonstrated that such is the case, they have been indexed.*

Aconitum cam., Æthusa, and Hypericum have been indexed from the revised pathogenesies in vol. x, supplement. All corrections noted in the work, especially at the end of vols. iii and x, have been observed. A few others have also been made, and still others will be published when the revision of the Encyclopedia, now in progress, shall have been completed.

The arrangement is strictly alphabetical: FIRST, THE PART AFFECTED; SECOND, THE SENSATION, conditioned or modified.

I. There is no more reason for grouping the main anatomical divisions of the body in an index to our symptomatology than in arranging a dictionary or an encyclopedia by topics; indeed, there is much less reason for so doing. The general anatomical divisions in our Materia Medica are not satisfactory as a basis for classifying symptoms. We venture to hope that future standard works will present a new scheme free from theoretical ideas concerning the physiological action of drugs, classifying our symptomatology in a form which will permit ready reference, and enabling numerous provings to be condensed. In this index the part affected will be found by referring to its first letter; symptoms of the brachialis anticus muscle will be found under “B.,” of the wrist under “W.,” of the eye under “E.,” etc.

* Some observations concerning these will be found in our forthcoming Studies in Materia Medica.

This localization of symptoms is carried out to the fullest extent; for example, in back we may find, first, all the sensations of the back (in general) alphabetically arranged from ache to weakness, then the various parts of the back arranged alphabetically:

— Arteries of.

— Near axilla.

— Opposite bowels.

— Dorsal region, etc.

Under each of these subdivisions of the back the sensations or symptoms will be found in alphabetical order, conditioned or peculiar as the case may be.

If the anatomical region have a specific and independent name, it is placed by itself; for example, thigh, cheek, hypochondrium, umbilicus, etc.

One important point must not be overlooked, namely, the sides. In the chest, abdomen, back, and other parts, the numerous symptoms of the sides are placed together under a special subdivision of the general part, and when the particular side is specified, the letter “r.” or “l.” follows the drug. In those portions of the body which are paired, this subdivision is unnecessary, as in thigh, hand, etc.

II. Sensations.—There are cogent reasons for grouping similar or even contrasted sensations. The British Repertory has done this in a very satisfactory manner; we, however, have arranged them alphabetically under the various headings, and have given numerous cross-references. Patients, as well as provers, vary in their ability to distinguish sensations, and what may seem to one only a sharp pain, may by another be distinguished as a cutting or sticking, or may even be recognized as composed of several distinct and peculiar sensations. There will be little difficulty in running over the list as here arranged. Even in large divisions, such as back, much less annoyance will be experienced, we fancy, than if the sensations were arranged in groups with a supplementary section for sensations that could not be classified.

A word should be said concerning pain and sensation, expressions often used synonymously; for example, a “cutting pain,” a “cutting sensation,” a “cutting,” all of which mean the same thing. We have placed them all under cutting, and whenever a sensation or pain has been expressed by an adjective which could be used as a substantive, expressing a distinct sensation, this has been so used and classified.

III. Under each sensation will be found its conditions and peculiarities. The conditions are first given and arranged in three sections:

(A.) General Conditions: First, Time; Second, Circumstance.

The "time" is arranged by the hours of the day and night, the circumstances alphabetically.

(B.) Conditions of Aggravation: First, Time; Second, Circumstance.

(C.) Conditions of Amelioration: First, Time; Second, Circumstance.

A sensation conditioned will not be found in the list of drugs under the unconditioned sensation; but an aggravation or amelioration, repeats the drug in the unconditioned section; for example, "aching in the morning." The drug will not be found under the general aching, but ONLY among those aching in the morning. While aching, < or > in the morning is aching ALL THE TIME, and < or > in the morning.

The peculiar sensations are arranged alphabetically after the unmodified sensation; for example, back, pain. All the drugs having simply pain are given with the conditions; then follow all the (P.) peculiar pains alphabetically arranged, each with its conditions.

Among these peculiar sensations will be found all modifications of the original sensation, such as course and direction (always under the initial region), alternations of sensation, etc.

Much explanatory matter has been omitted, but only when it was of no value in defining the sensation.

It was intended to add to the Index a chapter of conditions; but the size of the work renders it impossible to arrange them properly. This will be done in a separate work to be called the Book of Conditions.

In the preparation of the Encyclopedia and its Index, we have been actuated by a desire to assist in making firm the foundations upon which homœopathic therapeutics rest. We have witnessed, with anxiety, the readiness of prominent members of the homœopathic school of medicine to abandon homœopathy for empiricism, and to prescribe drugs from clinical rather than from pathogenetic indications; and with equal anxiety have we noticed the indifference manifested concerning the origin of symptoms in repertories and textbooks, provided only they served to illustrate the action of high potencies. Inasmuch as the physiological action of drugs may be obtained from high potencies, and the sick may recover while under such action, it behooves homœopathic physicians to act with caution and rest their feet upon the rock of pure Materia Medica, and not upon the shifting sands of "symptoms," gathered from sick and well alike.

As long as our knowledge of the action of drugs upon the healthy is imperfect so long we are obliged at times (though rarely) to rely upon clinical indications, and to this end we recommend the use of repertories which contain such indications. A good clinical repertory is certainly a desideratum, but it should not be confined to material derived from homœopathic practitioners. There are good observers in therapeutics, not homœopathists in name, and many works professedly empirical abound in clinical points of value.

We shall be glad to receive notice of any errors in the "Index." We have striven to make it exact, but such work can never be perfect.
